

EDNA AND VERN HEISE PRIZE FOR COMMUNICATION

Purpose of the Prize

The prize (originally named the Edna Ferris Heise Award of Excellence in Communication) was established in 2007 to honour the life and work of Edna Ferris Heise (1922-2006) in memory of her outstanding contribution to preaching, writing and speaking. Edna Ferris Heise was a graduate of the Teachers Course at Avondale College (1942) and the Bible Worker's Course (1944). Her lifetime of ministry and service included experience as a Conference departmental director's personal assistant, and as a primary teacher. Her most impressive contributions, however, were in decades of preaching, speaking, and writing, in the context of the pastoral ministry which she shared with her minister husband, Vern. Edna was a highly effective communicator. Hundreds of poems, articles, news stories and news releases, speaking assignments, and sermons, produced and delivered in more than 60 years of active ministry provide an enduring testimony to her passion for the ministry of gospel communication. As well, she was a keen supporter of women serving in ministry at every level of church activity. In August 2014 with the passing of Vern, the prize was renamed the Edna and Vern Heise Prize in honour of their lifelong commitment to Women in Ministry and Christian communication.
